NLRB SELECTED AS FINALIST IN PRESTIGIOUS IT AWARDS PROGRAM

The National Labor Relations Board was selected as a finalist in the 2009 Excellence.Gov Awards, a program established by the American Council for Technology and Industry Advisory Council. A panel of 25 judges – Federal Government and industry executives – reviewed 60 nominations and selected 21 for recognition at the ceremony held on Tuesday, April 14, 2009.

The awards recognize best practices in the Federal Government's management and use of information technology, and in particular, "those programs – and their managers – who have achieved exceptional results in the management of IT to support the government's mission and serve citizens," according to the Council.

The NLRB project for which it was selected a finalist was building and deploying a website portal and master data management model to allow Agency case participants to electronically file case documents, track case updates, receive decisions electronically, and manage their profile online.

The best overall award winner was NIH Institutes. Other finalists included the Departments of Energy and Interior, OPM, and Library of Congress.
